Auxiliary Water Pumps

Data available through Activant/Epicor (Code: CEJ), WHI (Code: CPD), or ShowMeTheParts.com

Cooling systems have become more complex and vehicle manufacturers have added auxiliary water pumps to help circulate coolant to the heater core. This allows the vehicle to heat the cabin better when idling and operating at low speeds. Start-Stop engines use the auxiliary water pump to keep coolant circulating when the engine is off when stopped at a traffic light or in slow moving traffic. The auxiliary water pump is also used to cool turbo chargers, if equipped, when the car is off. This is important because turbo chargers produce a large amount of heat.

The most common failure of the auxiliary water pump is electric motor failure due to age and wear. When the auxiliary water pump fails, it will reduce heater operation and may cause the vehicle to struggle to defrost the windshield or, more importantly, cause the turbo charger to fail. Be sure to check the auxiliary water pump in the event of the engine overheating or lack of heater performance.

Rein Automotive offers a select line (10 SKUs) of auxiliary water pumps for European applications, covering over 2,300,000 total VIO. Rein auxiliary water pumps are a direct replacement and come complete with the mounting, just like the OE.
